My mistake then, I remember someone telling me they were. Apologies then. See how easy that is?

Does everything have to be about overlords and masters? Truth be told, I wonder if they are really worried at all when they see folks taking each other out. Here it seems to be mentally, but eventually it will be physically too. EVERYTHING of conflict is IMPORTANT to survival. Haven't you ever been divorced? If nothing else, we learn what we can expect out of humanity on here, and that is a very valuable thing to get down.

It seems what Andy is doing is trying to "survive" in what he has learned to consider as a "hostile" environment. He feels he is right. Chico does as well. I am sure their desire to post is growing dim.

Thank you, knapsack. Yours is very helpful information.

It's important to note that Andy and I ran our log-in experiments (and this time, they were indeed experiments) after the server was restarted following the failure. This was maybe a couple of hours after the system initially went down. At that time, the server had been up for a while (from what I hear, the server was only down for 20 minutes or so), so I don't believe anything was failing. As far as I could tell, the Nexus site was working normally for me, using my log-in ID and password. This was not the case using Andy's log-in ID and password, for either me or Andy.

Not necessarily, just as lack of dissention is not going to defeat the PTB.

How about an agreement 'holding each other harmless' for the sake of the common good, pursuing bloody details if need be in private conversations with those directly involved, and MOVING ON FOR CHRIST'S SAKE?

I don't see a need for private conversations when potentially everyone could be affected by this problem. May I remind you that if you don't want to see this discussion, read other threads.

We need to OPT OUT. Do not give them the satisfaction of public bickering. What precisely, 'principle' is being argued here so vociferously in public that is so god-damned important to our survival anyway? I just don't see it.

We are trying to satisfy the quest for truth here, Akh, not the PTB. I am not interested in "opting out" of that principle.

This is important information that Richard has presented here. The system was running with a corrupt vbguest table for some time after the server was restarted. That is a potential source of trouble, depending on the contents of the vbguest table, how the data is used, and the particulars of the corruption. This is a valid candidate for the troubles associated with Andy's log-in that probably occurred during the time period before the table was repaired. There is the potential that the resulting errors could indeed be log-in specific. That means it could very well explain the problem without invoking the existence of the MU mod.

I find that to be a satisfactory explanation. That means I could very well have connected the dots incorrectly, as I stated in my post apologizing for my error.

I am once again reminded of the theme in this thread, which all of us are guilty of.

Re: Nexus, we have a problem.

Not that this thread is any of my business, but it has been going long enough this is the only current thread left for me to insert an 'idea'.

I've read recently that the nature of our existence (enlightened or otherwise) is one of an 'oscillating energy wave'. The translation is that both negative and positive energy fields constantly pass through the nexus called 'us'. The objective of evolutionary advancement is to harness and 'polarize' those energies so one is attracted to the positive pole. If one loses perspective then one tends to regress to the negative falling prey to all the historical baggage that we as 3-dimensional creatures are so susceptible. To overcome is to reawaken our psychic anatomy and to realign (polarize) in the positive direction. The caveat is that we are only 3-D regardless of the level of polarization and as such will inevitably have periods of regression, so just get over it. To expect perfection invites disappointment...been there, done that many times.

Magamud, It's just a forum and those who do the work get to make the decisions. I ran a very high wire and emotional ex-cult peer forum for over two years and damn well know the toll and the extra work people like you impose upon the already overburdened forum workers. I used to call myself "forum janitor." You get to do all the work, get all the criticism and emotional crap people want to throw at you for whatever you do.

Re: Nexus, we have a problem.

It would sure be helpful if there were some lessons to be gleaned from this dust-up that we could all use to clarify our "roadmap to the future"..... we have all encountered so many forms of creative conflict on these forums, at PA - bleeding over into this forum, too. Since supposedly this all is a learning experience, and most of us agree that the www is essential to our future thrival, if not our very survival - and at the same time the www has been identified as a primary target for demolition by the raving demonic crew or less than 1%.....

should we not learn from these kinds of conflicts?

First - (may I suggest) that it would not be contrary to any value of 'democracy' or egalitarianism for members of this forum to SELF POLICE. When the breeze starts to get turbulent, when the waves of ego/emotion start to blow - and especially BLOW BACK, can we not all resolve to pursue personal issues, for example issues of integrity (did, or did not a person do thus and so) directly with the person involved and preferably in person, in private - BECAUSE to bring those issues to the attention of all members AND THE PUBLIC prematurely without sufficient prior efforts to privately resolve misunderstandings distorts whatever positive element may have motivated someone to raise the issues by making these things PUBLIC????

Have we forgotton what 'civility' is?

Once the facts are determined - then that is the time, if at all, to air any actual transgressions in public.

There is no getting around the need for respect and mutual consideration. Even the relentless quest for TRUTH may end in disaster if the breathless search for confirmation of personal principles ends in the destruction of mutual respect and trust among the whole group.

No principle is more important than that of mutual respect, love and consideration. This is true even in battle between honorable foes. And, IMO the only true cause for battle to the death is theft of property and assets and invasion of one's lands and home. To the death battles fought over PRINCIPLES are the bloodiest of all, and are not resolvable on this plane. In fact, battles over principles are, by their very nature, the most vicious, long-standing and irresolvable of human battles because they are, by their very nature ABSTRACT conflicts. Look at the ideological battles that plague us to this day - and have for thousands of years.

We must find a better way to resolve conflict. First, attempt to resolve misunderstandings directly with the individual/individuals involved - then, examine the information to determine the facts. IF enough facts are available, draw a conclusion. Take up redress of grievances directly with the individual/individuals involved. IF there is no redress of grievances, take it to a public forum for discussion and analysis. IF no clear conclusion is reached after a reasonable period of public discussion, THEN weigh the consequences of continuing the debate without any sign of clear-cut resolution. IF the consequences are primarily negative to the GROUP (for after all, the well-being of the group should outweigh any individual concern) then consider compromise or dropping the issue. ONLY if the issue involves invasion/theft of land and assets or attacking and killing family members and tribe - should one consider going to war. Going to war based on principles and closely held personal beliefs alone are a prescription for disaster.

Pulling down the whole temple because one is personally enraged over a personal injury is called the "SAMSON EFFECT".... it is NOT an effective way to get to the bottom of the reasons for misunderstandings between people, let alone resolve conflicts.

There must be another way. If not now - WHEN?

Re: Nexus, we have a problem.

Good point Akh. the problem arises when some members DO NOT WANT to discuss the problems in private justifying it with a thousand excuses (it concern everyone, I I I think everybody suffers from it, it is for the forum that it is public, etc etc).

You are talking also about mutual respect, love and consideration. 100% for it here.

it made me think that we could self police IF there is agreement on values, some beliefs, and their definitions/applications. These could be like guidelines.

We should do like we do when we want to have a team building exercise. Defining common values, the way they apply, the beliefs they support and the behaviors that are supporting or negating. These serve as guidelines, then self policing as a group is much easier.

what do you all think about this? Some of us may have lead some teams on these paths and my be of help. All this could be done through Skype voice or chat (preferably voice, easier to manage). The participants involved could be the usual forum active participants as to stream the input (otherwise this could be a mess) and later on the non usual suspect (forum non active) could be invited to complete.

After this is done, we could design a step by step way to resolve conflicts and to mediate.

Just a thought.

My fees are 4,000 a day lol (joke). No those are not cents. lol

Re: Nexus, we have a problem.

hello nexus .

After digesting , cooling off and doing other stuff I have decided I should spend some hours here today , since I might have caused some ripples in the already stormy pond , and somehow should see that through before I take a forum vacation ...

I notice that the "all nexus members part deux" thread <http://nexus.2012info.ca/forum/showthread.php?p=2> is temporarily closed . It would be nice to have that open since there probably are some issues to adress and lay to rest. I have just skimmed some , but will read it when I log back in. That will be in some hours , tonight , after doing something practical and having a walk outside .
